Papers that attract citations

- Comprehensive Literature review High
- Literature review plus proposition Medium
- Original article High (if in a top journal)
- Theoretical article Depends on timing
- A case study Medium - Low
- Research note Low
- Low ranked journals and conferences Low

- Research is a luxury and you need resources for it
- Real and important problem
- Methodological rigour
- Impact assessment

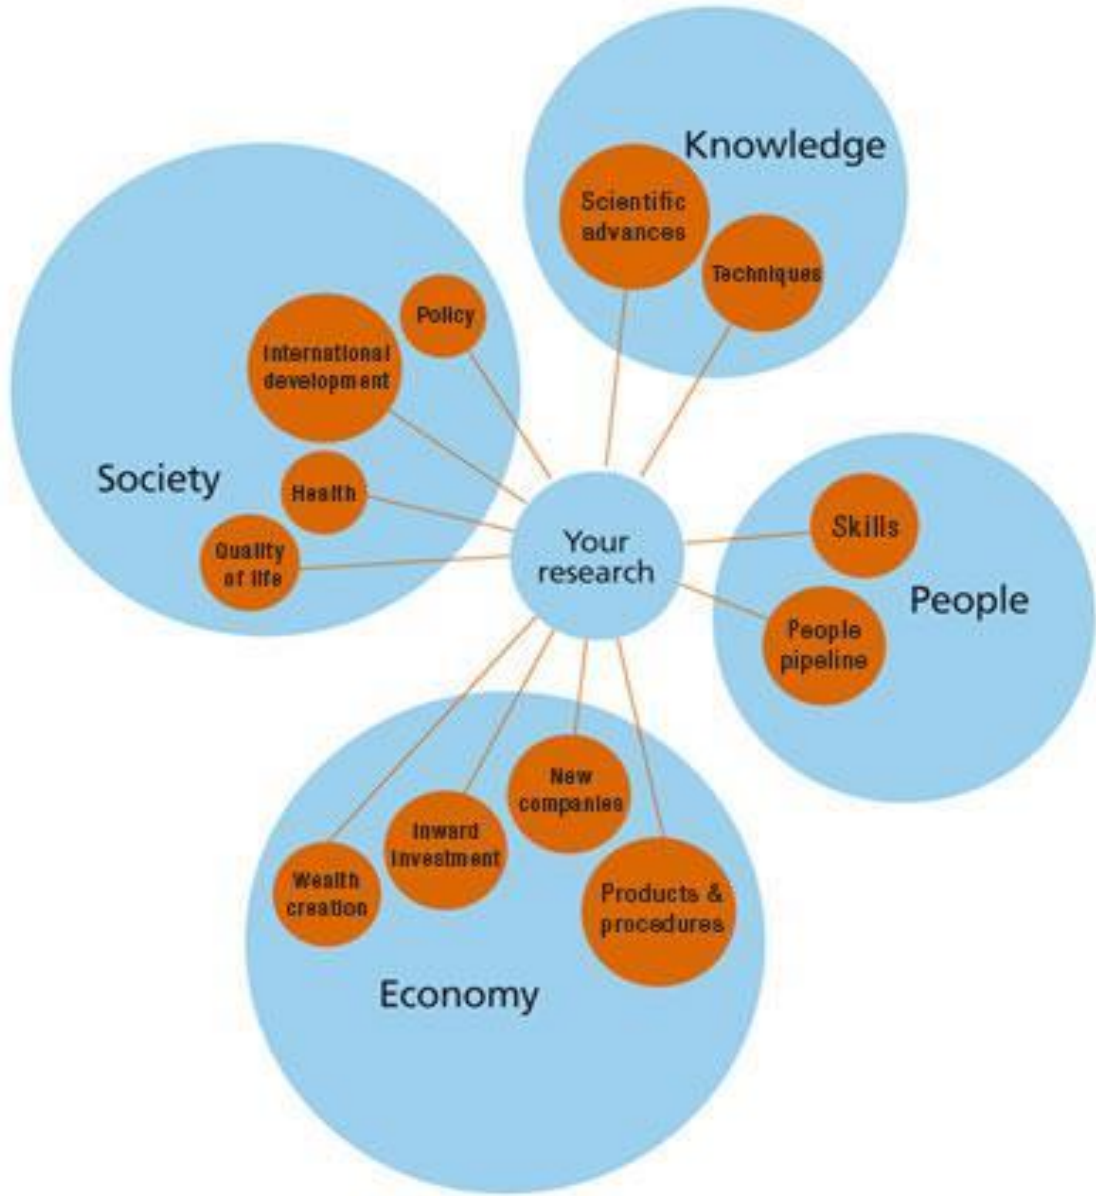

- Why is your research interesting?
- What policy relevance (if any) does it have?
- What's innovative about your methods or your research?
 - Are you using a new method?
 - Are you using a well-accepted method with new data?
 - What differentiates what you have done from others

- Major criteria
 - Does the proposal address a well-formulated problem?
 - Is it a research problem?
 - Is it an important problem (solution will be useful)?
 - Is special funding necessary to solve the problem, or to solve it quickly enough, or could it be solved using the normal resources of a well-found laboratory?
 - Do the proposers have a good idea on which to base their work? i.e. technical substance.
 - Does the proposal explain clearly what work will be done?
 - Do the proposers have a good track record?

- Minor criteria
 - Strong research team and new researchers in the field.
 - A reasonable balance between different research areas.
 - Evidence of industrial interest in a proposal, and of its potential for future impact.
 - Good project management
